

From: Vincent Le Corre <[REDACTED]>
Subject: URGENT: the dinner we had in 2019
Date: June 3, 2021 at 01:43
To: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]@[REDACTED].net>
Cc: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]@[REDACTED].net>, [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]@gmail.com>

[Subject # 2] [Subject # 3]

Dear [REDACTED] ← [Subject # 2]

My wife was in copy of the email

I consider you are my friend. I hope you feel the same about me.

I don't want to express myself in the wrong way. English is not my mother tongue, please always remember that. There are times I might not choose the most pertinent, accurate words to describe what I want to express.

[Subject # 3]

Steve Easterbrook is the former CEO of McDonald's Corporation.

Back in 2019, before he got fired, we had a dinner together with [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] at our home.

During that dinner, we discussed my case concerning McDonald's. It was very clear that I was the victim and that McDonald's was the criminal entity who had committed aggravated fraud.

If I remember correctly and I believe I do, at some point, you kind of laughed and said that you knew I was smart. But to me, it gave me the impression that you had the impression that I had wittingly outsmarted McDonald's. Now, this last sentence is just speculation.

But you also added something else, and that they couldn't extradite me because there were no extradition treaty between France and China. This part, I am certain about it because I even went to check online after you left whether it was true that there were no extradition treaty between France and China.

Assuming that it is true that McDonald's was indeed seeking my extradition, I need to understand how you could have possibly known that McDonald's wanted to extradite me.

Please [REDACTED] I need to understand and I want to avoid speculating too much. That's why I am asking you directly.

← [Subject # 2]

God Bless you.

Vincent